In this course, we will discuss Kant’s central doctrine concerning knowledge: transcendental idealism, or the claim that human beings can know objects as they appear to us, but not as they are in themselves. We will examine Kant’s consequent claims that on this view he can respond to skeptical challenges to the possibility of human knowledge.