This course is a gentle introduction to Metaphysics. Metaphysics is an effort to think rigorously about the fundamental nature of reality. Some questions of Metaphysics involve objectivity: are there objective facts? Is similarity among objects objective? Does reality contain causes, or are they a projection of our representation? Some other Metaphysical questions do not: is the world deterministic? If yes, how does that affect our belief that persons have free will. What is time? Are there other possible worlds, and if so how should we think of them? Throughout the course we will keep in sight a fundamental methodological questions: how is it possible for us to make progress in thinking about these matters?
