In this course, we will examine central issues in social epistemology with a special focus on disagreement, the norms governing our assessment of the credibility of others, the nature of testimonial injustice, the extent to which silence can confer positive epistemic status, and the knowledge attributed to groups (such as corporations and universities).