In this course we will explore the nature of truth, and its connections to meaning and representation. Issues we will examine include the bearers of truth, truth-makers, whether there is an underlying nature to truth. We will survey a number of theories of truth, starting with the 'classical' theories of the late 19th and early 20th century, such as the coherence and correspondence theories of truth. We will then turn to the connections between truth and meaning, and explore how theories of truth can shed light on the nature of meaning, and if the converse might also be true. We will also look at how general these connections are, and if they bear on the general notion of representation. Finally, as time permits, we will look at current issues relating to relativism and pluralism about truth, and how they relate to relativism and pluralism about content.
